	Criteria				Points
	35 pts	30 pts	20 pts	0 pts
Relevance/ Understanding	• Student fully answers/addresses the discussion topic • Posts are consistently in-depth and detailed, with new, insightful ideas clearly connected to the topic • Demonstrates a command of the discussion topic	• Posts are relevant • Posts offer some depth and insight, and some new ideas • Shows an understanding of the discussion topic	• Posts are not fully relevant • Post contain some rehashing or summary of other postings • Seems to grasp discussion topic at least superficially • Some posts agrees or asks questions	• Postings contribute no new ideas, have minimal depth and detail • Rehashes or summarizes others • Unclear if student grasps topic • Mostly agrees or asks questions
Cross-Section of Posting	• Posts to more than 5 threads • Contributes to the discussion significantly through numerous posts	• Clearly shows activity reading all posts	• Posts to at least 3 other threads	• Posts do not meet the required minimum
Timeliness/ Activity		• Posts are on multiple days (more than 3) • Student clearly has activity engaging in the discussion on multiple days	• Activity is at a minimum • All posts are on the same day/hour	• Posts do not meet the required minimum
Total (100 pts)

A note on academic dishonesty: Discussion posts are no different from writing a paragraph in an article and required to follow article writing principles, especially avoiding plagiarism and including references. If a paragraph excerpt is used from other resources, then that paragraph has to be paraphrased or made "your own" similar to writing a research paper. Direct copying of written work or computer code is considered to be dishonest and will result in a grade of zero on the assignment and possible an F in the course.

Sources: References are preferred to be actual publications, or "quality" web sites. Stack overflow, Kaggle, university web sites and similar technical web sites with no commercial advertisements are considered acceptable.